Apartments to cater for the Jewish Sabbath with futuristic lift systems

A LUXURY development of apartments designed with specially-adapted features to cater for the Jewish Sabbath, is set to be complete next month.

The £2m Grange Apartments, in Waterpark Road, Broughton Park come integrated with a lift which runs on a continuous cycle on the Sabbath, has lights on timers and special kosher kitchen adaptations.

Contractors Russells Construction and developers Kohli Partnership are behind the 19,365sq ft development which has been part of a 50-week programme, and local members of the Jewish community have commended their ingenuity.

David Teacher, member of the Association for Jewish ex-service men (A.JEX), of Kersal Road, said: "For people who are orthodox and adhere to all the rules and regulations of the Sabbath, this way of life is a necessity.

"So if they can live there and continue to do this and leave their normal life then why not."

The nine apartments made up of two and three-bedrooms including a 2,100sqft penthouse, are not only installed with bespoke lighting and a fully programmable under floor heating system, but also come fitted with 'smart home technology' which allows homeowners to install their own multi-room audio and visual systems.

But their unique selling point according to Russells Construction, is the 'low-vibration piling technique' used in the lift to make sure there is minimum disturbance to neighbouring residents.

Andrew Russell, director of Russells Construction, said: "We were delighted to be asked to see the project through from cutting the sod to the laying of the carpet and feel great pride in having overseen the whole scheme.

"It is always satisfying to fulfil the client's brief, especially when there are such challenges to overcome, but thanks to the skills and experience of the team we expect to successfully deliver a unique, contemporary apartment complex."
